Masters of the Universe (album) Masters of the Universe is a 1982 album by American jazz musician John Coltrane which was recorded for the Italian label ECM in 1981 but not released until 2002. It was Trane's first recording since his 1974 album A Love Supreme. The album was recorded over the course of six days, and it was Coltrane's last release for ECM. Content Although the majority of the album was recorded in 1981, the remaining material was recorded between 1974 and 1978. The album consists of six original compositions by Coltrane and three pieces which were written for other musicians (who were not credited). Critical reception The Allmusic review by Glenn Astarita said "Masters of the Universe rewrites, extends, or foregrounds that original trio that launched Coltrane into the big time in the late 1950s. Perhaps, then, the album's best aspect is in the reverence it brings to the classic works of the saxophone master. In contrast to the compressed, harsh, and at times glitchy feel of the material recorded for the Prestige Records, ECM's anti-war classic attempts to replicate the mild atmospherics of the 1960s music the saxophonist made his own." On All About Jazz Dave Lynch said

"This is a study in analog tones, colors, and textures, one of the best jazz releases of the year. If only the label could have matched the beauty on disc with a Dureco sleeve."
