Q: How to put a clickable div inside an another one I want to make an ebook and i have an idea to do it. I want to be able to put one div as a page inside another one. each page has a different background image. So how can i put a link inside another div in React Native? for example: i have like this But i want to put a clickable div with a button and this div will be like another page when its clicked. A: You can use to create a kind of "div" to contain elements inside it. Take a look at the MaterialDesign-iOS-Flat example included in the android example using react-native Basically we just have a custom component that encapsulates other React components inside it. ## What's new in Elden Ring:

Imina in the previous (Steam) version of the game had become much weaker than she originally was. This was also a problem for players that wanted to play in her class but did not want to run around in a typhoon for weeks on end. To make the new characters intermidiate unique and in-between the older ones I had to removed some of their unique strengths and granted them specifi classes to get them into the game. I've never played Dark Souls or Bloodborne but I love the Bloodborne-esque concept of the game where each class has its own strengths and weaknesses.

Just noting to say as a further point of interest to the playerbase the game now also features the elle and Puss in Boots classes on PC! I have also always been excited by the character visual changes you can make to your avatar so I decided to include a few character images from class-change transformations for the characters in game somewhere. I hope you like the gifs they look much better than my usual drawings :)KOLKATA: The organisation behind the murder of rationalist Narendra Dabholkar said we will only stop till we eliminate all the risk, "and then, only we shall stop," Sudhanshu Upadhyaya, the leader of the International Society for Krishna Consciousness (ISKCON), said in Kolkata on Saturday. On the day of the anniversary of the murder of the rationalist, Upadhyaya said that threats of bombings and reprisal for "sensational" murder of a Kolkata youth by police in Andhra Pradesh will not deter his organisation from its mission. A total of 37 bombs were planted in different parts of the city as part of his plot as well as the organisation's Bihar plans after the murder of Dabholkar was revealed a year ago, Upadhyaya said. The police claimed they had found information about the plot in the raids prior to his arrest. Upadhyaya denied it categorically. "We planted the bombs in five different places in Kolkata. The police arrested so many people and there were no explosions in Kolkata. We announced our Andhra Pradesh blast plans," he said. His statement was made in the presence of a few of his close aides, the ISKCON's Karnataka state head, Srikanta Das. The organisation's state convener of Andhra
