Thank you for downloading.Q: How to create a varchar(max) field in a Web Application Project I have a SP that returns a single varchar(max) column.

I want this to display a single value, although I understand it is stored as a string inside SQL Server. The question is: how to configure my ADO.NET Entity Framework generated objects so that this field will be as Intellisense would like, i.e. varchar(max)? Do I need to create a property of this type and then tell EF to ignore it? My code looks like: [System.ComponentModel.Browsable(false), System.ComponentModel.DesignerCategoryAttribute("code"), System.ComponentModel.Description("Encoder ID")]
[System.Data.DbType("char(10)")] public string encoderID { get { return

this._encoderID; } set { this._encoderID = value; } } Is there anything that EF can do for me, or should I just create this as a string property? A: Use an explicit type. See here for details on Explicit and Type Attributes in Microsoft.Data.Edm. public string colName { get; set; } [System.Data.Edm.DatabaseType("Edm.String")] public string colName1 { get; set; } A:
