Collection in June. So if you have been waiting for a WiiÂ .That might be one of the factors that's prevented Google or Facebook from becoming the main source of your daily news. But that doesn't mean you can't build your own personalized news dashboard to help you reduce your information intake while keeping you on top of trending topics. This week, we're looking at two of the most popular options. There are lots of ways to help you think about news but these two are especially compelling. Get Social with a Facebook Group Facebook groups are by far the most popular newsgroups on Facebook. Sometimes they're organized around a topic like "working moms" or "Floridians sick of taxes." Other times, the groups are loose and aim to connect friends who are interested in the same thing, like "Cannabis & Craft Brews." Some of the most popular newsgroups are part of that second category. Groups like "Hi, I'm an American" and "Legalization Nation" are composed of some of the most active and friendly activists on Facebook. On the other side of the spectrum, there are groups like "The People's Republic of Fresno" and "Deaf/Hard of Hearing People in LA." They're challenging and outlandish but still offer a window into the personalities behind the political activism. These newsgroups are often a great place to find news, but keep an eye on the moderation. Some of the groups are formed of a small, passionate group who are so engaged they're willing to have the kind of back-and-forth dialogue you'd only read in a magazine or newspaper article. If you like reading news groups but don't want to take on a group full of aggressive, combative activists, then BuzzFeed News has an excellent primer. Grow Your Own News Feeds I know what you're thinking: how can I grow my own news feeds? And I have to agree with that. It's the very essence of private Facebook browsing. Facebook has moved aggressively to limit that ability. The News Feed, for instance, has removed functionality that allowed people
