- A game where you hold on to your keyboard and throw a box at the screen, all the while trying to avoid getting hit by obstacles on the way. - 20 puzzle packed levels, each with their own mini boss at the end! - Retro styled pixel graphics - Retro music - and some great ideas about what we want to do next time we make a game! A game from just 2 days of coding with basically zero previous coding knowledge! See how far you can get before you run out of time! EDIT: We've updated the game to run on Windows Phone and Windows 8 / 8.1. We believe we have significantly improved the game as a result. Try it out if you can. Our friends at MMO Soda have put together a great trailer for their upcoming game, Neocoloo. This game is a life sim where you raise a virtual pet. The game is currently in pre-alpha, and the trailer is just a glimpse into the greatness that is to come. The game will cost $3.99 and run on all major mobile platforms including the Nintendo 3DS, Wii U, Android, iOS, Windows Phone 8 and Windows 8. Get in on the ground floor and download it now. This build of the game is fully playable, but not finished. The only feature that is fully implemented is your horse. Other than that you can walk around and explore. When you build your houses your social status increases. Shops are opened and other buildings are added. When you ride your horse you can travel around and explore the town. You will start to gain money which is used to buy structures and refine your horse. When you will be happy with your horse your horse will level up. Houses, barns, posts, trees, bridges will be added from time to time. Eventually you will need a new home. A classic 80's game for Windows Phone 8, with pixel art, zooming, and powersliding. This is a real classic. Set back from the town, with a damselfly on your shoulder, as you pelt rocks into the air to knock down a flower, taming the frogs (who are actually part of the flower too, just pull the bark off and they will start to talk), and using the plants to pelt the flowers with. With only 2 lives, there's no room for error. This build of the game is fully playable, but not finished. The only d41b202975

: 17 (Photos) Sea Bass Recipe from Argentina’s Chichele Restaurant Because i’m training in the kitchen here at HotPinkBoheme, I thought it was about time that I came back and share another recipe with you. Earlier in the year I wrote about how I had finally “summitted” some very big, and very delicious fish. I went to Italy with my friend Ana to train at Chichele Fish, a Michelin-starred restaurant in Rome. We trained in the fabulous restaurant and the rest of the team there but this post will be focused on the cooking at Chichele’s. It was an honor and a pleasure to work there, I met some real pros, cooked for many heads of state, and prepared some truly tremendous dishes. In this post I’m back with some more than tongue-in cheeked advice. Of course the fish I used was a sea bass, but some of the cooking techniques and whole process that Ana and I used could be used for other types of fish as well. So, when you’re reading this post, we’ll be in Rome cooking seafood; we’ll be spending time in Largo Marconi’s Chichele Fish restaurant. Thank you again to Chichele Fish for letting me share the experience and because you’re an institution in Rome I’ll be able to get some photography/video work out of it. Warning for Caution; the photos are all clickable. Just so that you know. There’s a little bit of dialogue in there, but it’s not meant to be something read while chewing! *** One of my favorite pairings of all time has to be sea bass paired with themeas (anything with mustard). Crispy themeas, crunchy sea bass; they’re a match made in restaurant heaven. This dish is of course (minimally) inspired by Chichele Fish. Having said that, my version does differ a bit from Chichele’s in one important thing: I finished the sauce with a whole egg. If you’ve seen the starters menu I referenced previously, you’ll see that is listed as #4. #4 is a picture of a cooked sea bass and I’ve told you what it is, so what is it? It’s A TUNA
