Sensitivity of hand dermatitis to fragrances. Hand dermatitis may be caused by different factors, including irritants, mechanical trauma, and allergens, such as fragrances in cosmetics and household products. A variety of fragrances have been implicated as causative allergens for hand dermatitis. To determine the prevalence of fragrance allergy among patients with hand dermatitis in a tertiary care skin clinic setting. Cross-sectional, observational study. Hand dermatitis clinic of a tertiary care skin center. Twenty-one patients with hand dermatitis and a history of fragrance allergy and 14 patients with hand dermatitis but without a history of fragrance allergy. Sensitivity to fragrance allergens was examined by means of patch testing and manufactured fragrance testing solutions. Fragrances known to induce hand dermatitis were included in patch testing. Patch testing results were compared between the 2 groups. The prevalence of fragrance allergy among patients with hand dermatitis was 10%. Nine of the 14 patients without fragrance allergy were allergic to fragrances, whereas only 3 of the 21 patients with fragrance allergy reacted to fragrances. The only common fragrance that caused hand dermatitis in both groups was fragrance mix I. There was no significant difference in patch test reactivity between the 2 groups ($P = .6$).
