Description The Tesla Roadster was originally due to be introduced at the 2003 Frankfurt Motor Show. It was first revealed in a new film called The Matrix Reloaded and was due to be released in April 2003. Its special features included a 120 mile battery range, a top speed of 250 miles per hour and the ability to be charged in seconds. The Roadster was to be fitted with a supercharger, which would have dramatically improved its battery range. Production was to begin in early 2004. The Roadster was described as a sports car with zero emissions and with zero trade-offs with the environment. The first Roadster's build date was set at June 2004. However, it was later put forward to a later date to May 2005. After much expectation and media hype, the Tesla Roadster was finally shown to the public in October 2005, at the 2005 North American International Auto Show in Detroit. The Roadster was the first vehicle to feature the new Model S trademark, although it shares features with the Model S such as the Magnetic Load Equaliser and the Portal Windows. The Roadster looks similar to the Model S's inner surface. However, the door panels, the dashboard and the windscreen are made of magnesium, and not of Tesla's signature material. The power and torque of the electric motor is 350bhp at 7750rpm, which is twice the size of the Model S's battery and provides the vehicle with a range of 120 miles on one charge. The Roadster's 'silent mode' is activated by holing down the accelerator pedal. This enables the car to 60mph. The Roadster is a sport car with zero tailoging to end to cast from 0-50 mph at up to 60mph. The Roadster's a reore-mission vehicle, with zero tailoging emissions. The AirMode is a programme of advanced air suspension, capable of taking vehicles from 70mm over the maximum legal speed limit to 200mph. The system has a foldaway frame, enabling the driver to enter the Roadster from either the left or right of the
