I have a very specific question to the best of my knowledge. I have 2 pages, page 1 and page 2. On Page 1, I have a button which takes the user to page 2. Page 2 has a list. The user clicks on the list item and it takes them to page 3 which has some image along with a text. What I want to do is to see if the user clicked on the relevant list item. I want the same list item to be highlighted in page 2 (when the user navigates to page 2 with button from page 1) Since the list item on page 2 is the same, they may be of the same class or data-id. But if they are different, the anchor href will be different in page 2. I tried searching for a solution, but couldn't find one. If you have any idea of how to do this, let me know. Thank You A: In page 2's HTML, you add an id to the clicked list item. From page 1, you attach a listener that knows about the id Then you set the target attribute to the href of the id you attached to the list element. Here's how this should work: function addEventListener(element, event, listener) { element.addEventListener(event, listener, false); } function removeEventListener(element, event, listener) { element.removeEventListener(event, listener, false); } function updatePage(id) { removeEventListener('click', pageChanged, null); var url = '

You're helpdesk.Climbing is a popular recreation activity which involves standing upright in one or more feet, and moving outwardly against a vertical or near vertical face or wall. Many forms of climbing equipment have been developed to increase a climber's safety and increase the difficulty of a climb. For example, a climber can attach a rope to the head of a climber to help maintain balance and control of the climber during a climbing activity. Aside from ropes and other equipment, trainers have been used to train a climber and help the climber improve their climbing techniques. The most basic climbing trainer is simply a box with a padded or otherwise rounded top. The climber can stand or kneel on the trainer and move along its top. Climbing boxes can be used to practice standing up and sitting down and one has been designed for these purposes, see for example, U.S. Pat. No. 4,828,094 to Felt. An adjustable rigid stand with a pad platform, a padded back support and a headrest has been developed to train a climber to stand upright on its platform. The climber can use this trainer while climbing. Climbing training boxes have also been used to train climbers in a variety of special situations such as, for example, climbing on an object or a hand-over-hand wall climb. Examples of this type of climbing trainer are seen in U.S. Pat. No. 4,828,094, U.S. Pat. No. 4,951,914 and U.S. Occ13bf012

I consider myself to be addicted to it and I am not ashamed of that. I am also passionate about running. I've been running for 8 years and I ran my first 1 km race in early 2008 and then I was hooked. I train nearly everyday in various ways and go to the gym and strength train as well. I have run across the street to the nearest running store to buy new shoes and I sign up for races and I go to as many as I can every year. I love running outside in nature but it is raining and it is too cold to run outdoors. So, I've always liked indoor races but last year I ran my first half marathon and it was also my first time running through a tunnel. I had some terrible days in my life when I was younger and I was so afraid of the dark and if I would ever run at night. I was in my mid 20's and I was living in Edmonton, Canada. I didn't want to leave my house after dark. I didn't want to get into a car. My brother had gotten into a car accident the week before and I was afraid I would end up with the same thing. But, after this terror I thought, "Well, maybe
