Everyone's Got A Price The Avengers did a nice job here. They got the plot to move along quickly while introducing some great new characters. Not to mention the fights were pretty good too. There was no sense of cliché. Like the movie before it, this one was nothing if not action filled. Even though the movie relies heavily on the concept of superheroes, there were moments when it really isn't necessary to have them do things that most people do in real life (like taking off and landing a plane in the middle of the sky.) The pilots were excellent. And they were exciting! The voice casting was great. So was the CGI. The music was pretty good too. There were certain scenes where the background music was kind of irritating, but I have to say that I get a whole lotta nostalgia every time I hear the Hulk smash! If you're a die hard comic book fan, this one will be a fun distraction. If you're not a comic book fan, you still might enjoy it. It looks good. This movie had the feel of a cartoon. As much as I don't like cartoons, I could see why they chose that for this one. The special effects reminded me a lot of "Shrek". They were well done, but I also hated that they gave the characters a CG look. But to each their own! Shaun Johnson's ghostly photo was one of the best There are a lot of good images of Shaun Johnson that were snapped during his time at Wigan. Unfortunately for us, those images were almost always taken in Wigan. But, one of the best images of him came out of Sydney when he was with the Titans. It also came out of an event that had nothing to do with sports at all. At the opening night of APEC 2017 in Sydney, Shaun Johnson, along with co-host Kathy Morrison, visited the exhibition "RAR: Weapons in Our World," where some pretty amazing weapons were on display. And amongst the weapons was this: Wednesday, January 15, 2011 Dare Devil for January 15, 2011 I mentioned in my last entry that I've decided to use the days of the week for my monthly DD entries rather than making them their own post on their day of the week. I think it's kind of weird to have to be reminded that there are seven days a week with the exception of the longest day of the year on the twenty

Q: Does .NET hide private var is kind of similar to C#? This is a rather general question. In c#, we can do this. `private string A = "sdfsdf"; public void whatever() { string res = string.Empty; res += A; }` Do languages in other platform hide private variable when they do not expose it? A: In .NET this is a property. In Java they are fields. If you want to know about accessibility of a field then look at the javadocs - there is a convenient method called `java.lang.reflect.Field.getAccessible()` which will do just that. The javadocs say that: Method `getAccessible()` allows a reflective object (such as a reflective `Field`) to report what parts of its declaring class's interface are accessible to the object. So in Java, it's not about hiding them, it's about providing the information about accessibility that is not exposed to you as a programmer, and only via `java.lang.reflect`. In .NET the type of the variable is set by the compilation process. The type is determined by the compiler. So it's not possible to prevent .NET from exposing those types via reflection. In your code example, the A variable is of type string and is accessible. Q: Silverlight DataGrid Row Chooser / Row Chooser i have a silverlight datagrid with a picture in the last column. I have the ability to select the picture and to move it. Now i would like a way to do a double click or something to copy the selected picture, if possible. I did not find anything that would allow me to copy the picture. Does anybody know something to do this? Thanks, Bender A: You can check for the selection of the row in the `RowSelector` event. If there's a selection, the `CurrentItem` property will contain the selected cell. The selected cell can then be copied. The selection is available as the `CurrentItem` property of the `SelectionChanged` event. You can check if the `EventArgs` args contain the `SelectionChangedEventArgs` (which is the same as the ones you get for the `SelectionChanged` event if there is a selection). For copying, we can create the actual copy in
