Revamp By Patrick Miller We know you've been waiting patiently for the first add-on to Steelcity Software's FSX Steam Edition. Now you can download it from this page. Install the add-on like any other and you'll have a Steam type interface showing that allows you to look up community games, buy them, and interact with them much as you would on Valve's platform. I'll be releasing more writing about this platform over the next week or so but in the meantime here's a quick sample from an interview with the developer below. Patrick Miller: Can you describe what you guys are working on? What type of add-on is the Steam Edition? Luke Dalgleish: Steam functionality will become available to the FSX Steam Edition. As a company we've considered applications that run on commonly available operating systems and strategies that incorporate multiplayer etc. Being in this era of self publishing and game distribution the reasons to use Steam are There are a number of single player commercial offerings but many are only marginally more cost effective if at all. Most don't integrate as well with FSX in the way that Steam Games on Steam do. Steam really is the perfect outlet for FSX, multiplayer and community oriented game development. We've been able to reach many new people with FSX since Steam Games and this really is the destiny for the game. The profile of Steam Games on Steam and, by extension, the Steam Emulator is all about the fact that there can be millions of simultaneous users across hundreds of thousands of individual machines. This ability is really untapped by FSX at the moment since it creates an unrealistic level of users in multiplayer. How many users of Steam Games are you talking about in relation to FSX? Its important to note that Steam games are completely independent of Steam Emulator, the ability to run Steam Apps is only built into the GUI and it is designed to be the user interface for Steam itself. That interface is called the Steam Library (SteamGames.ini). This allows for hundreds of thousands of simultaneous users sharing a game or other FSX content. In fact Steam Games started out being used as FSX Steam games and by the time we'd got all the bugs out of it they were the only option. The arrival of Steam turned FSX into an MMO and since then we've been playing
