Unspottable is a competitive game of observation, not action, inspired by the classic AirMech series. The game mechanics are extremely simple, making the different AI characters and the level variations and mechanics quite surprising. The game mechanics are quite simple, but there are four extra mechanics to spice things up: -> Cash on the table: The players can exchange the coins on the table. Players can then return to their machine and use the coins to buy new weapons, new environments or skip levels if they don't want to win it. -> Break the table: Now is the time to take revenge. You can break the table by punching the line, and it creates a large hole. You can throw one of the opponents through it to win the game. -> No going back: Every move counts, unless you complete the game or fight with the losing team. It's even possible to go back and change your last move. -> Time Warp: Each game lasts a time in the home screen. Players can then send their opponents back a time by punching them. The next player then gets an extra turn. About The Game: You will get the normal controls in the game. The controls are extremely simple: -> Mouse -> Camera -> Mouse You can also select a controller or a keyboard if you have one. This will only work for multiplayer. You can play Unspottable locally. In that case you can use the gamepad and both mouse wheels. You can select the configuration of the game: Single Player: Every AI character is the same. You can only compete against yourself. When the game starts, your character will appear. The home screen will then appear after two minutes. If you are offline, the home screen will stay for one minute. If you are online, the home screen will stay for one second. In single player, no movement is required. If you are offline, you will be given the option to fight another player. -> Punch Another Player -> Punch Another Player Online: The competition is against other players. The same rules will apply as in multiplayer. In single player, all players are moved to a single room and on the home screen. If the home screen lasts for a longer time, all players move to a new room. -> Punch Another Player -> Punch Another Player If you are offline, you will be given the option to fight another player. Hunt dinosaurs. With friends. CPRC: Apex Hunters is a single player/cooperative multiplayer game that pits players against the most intelligent, formidable, and brutal predators in history. And then there's the herbivores. They're pretty chill until you shoot them. The Center for Paranormal Research and Containment needs your help. There's been a security breach at a remote hot lab codenamed "Iridium-6," flooding the region with hundreds of live specimens. That's where you come in. A commissioned CPRC Field Team made up of freelancers and guns-for-hire, your objective is to recon the area and take charge of the situation by any means necessary. Complete tasks for the Center, and you will be rewarded. But with all other agency resources committed elsewhere, there will be no backup to save you if things go south. Keep your eyes up and weapons loaded. Good luck, Field Agents. *Hunt dinosaurs.
