Loren The Amazon Princess Transient expression of the rat atrial natriuretic factor (ANF) gene in muscle. To examine the relationship between the transcription and translation of the rat ANF gene, we constructed a recombinant adenovirus containing the rat ANF coding sequence (rANF), driven by a muscle-specific creatine kinase promoter. The adenovirus was injected into the tibialis anterior (TA) muscle of Wistar rats, which induced a transient increase in the expression of rANF mRNA. The maximum expression of rANF mRNA was confirmed by Northern blotting to be at 8 hr after injection. When TA muscles were pre-labeled with [³H]uridine and then challenged with the adenovirus, rANF mRNA was gradually decreased after the injection. Using in situ hybridization, the expression of rANF mRNA was observed in both the cytoplasm and nuclei of the TA muscle. These results indicate that the ANF gene can be transiently expressed in skeletal muscle under transcriptional control and that transcription and translation are both necessary for the generation of ANF peptide.
